PREFACE

Human efforts in the various fields have been better organized through certain agencies, professional, institutional or otherwise. Such organizational development of human activities has been a sign of our civilization—libraries forming a part of it. Human curiosity being what it is, there is always a demand for data regarding great many varieties of organizations—questions or enquiries regarding libraries being no exception. Compilation of Directory of Libraries by various institutions and individuals must have stemmed from such sustained need. The same factors led ultimately to the publication of the Indian Library Directory in 1938, (3rd ed. 1951), by the Indian Library Association, which contains tabulated information on 363 Indian libraries. Another effort in the same field produced the "Libraries in India", published by the Ministry of Education, Government of India, 1953. But the most important period of library development in India has been the post-independence era, which has registered an unprecedented activity in the fields of education and research, resulting in proliferous growth of libraries in academic institutions, research laboratories, government research departments, learned bodies, etc. Most of these libraries may be called special libraries, although it is very difficult to ascertain with any amount of certainty what can actually be comprehended under the term "Special Libraries". We have therefore tried to restrict our scope within those libraries which specialize in subjects—catering to the research needs of specialists, to the university and other academic libraries which contain sufficient source material for research work and to the libraries of the research and learned bodies which have large stock of such materials. In other countries such directories have been published, viz., "Directory of Special Libraries in Australia", compiled by B. M. Brown & others, 1955 (Sp. Lib. Assn., Australia) giving information about 384 libraries; "Directory of Research Libraries", compiled by Sp. Lib. Assn., Tokyo, 1956, giving information about 1,003 such libraries in Japan; "Directory of Special Libraries", compiled by I. L. Towner, 1953 (N. Y., Sp. Lib. Assn.) containing entries of 2,500 American libraries and others.

We are afraid that the users of this Directory may think that the number of entries in it has not been sufficient. Admitting that, we may state by way of information that the number of special and research libraries in our country cannot be more than 400 by a liberal estimate. In explaining why even that number is not represented, we may only say that perhaps we could not arouse the amount of professional enthusiasm and interest which is necessary to ensure a cent per cent return from the libraries whom we approached. We sent our Questionnaires to more than 500 libraries for scope to sift and select, and returns began to pour in trickles. After waiting for sometime, we started sending reminders regularly every two months. We have been at it for about two years and only this much we could gather. But we are confident that, although it represents only about 50% of the special and research libraries in India, it has sufficient potential to convey all relevant information as to historical background, stock, subjects covered and specialized, expenditure, staff, nature of clientele, facilities available, etc. with regard to all institutions recorded. We are not so presumptuous as to claim its comprehensiveness in coverage, but we are proud of having fostered it as a convenient tool of reference, practical and useful, within its limited scope. It has been designed after all, as a pilot project, keeping in view the publication of a more comprehensive directory with a wider coverage, at some future date.

Entries have been arranged according to the name of libraries, arranged in alphabetical order following letter by letter principle. Four separate indexes have been provided : (a) a subject index for easy location of subjects in the libraries concerned ; (b) a place index giving an idea of the distribution of such libraries in different parts of our country ; (c) a name index giving an alphabetical list of libraries ; (d) a nature of management index showing the distribution of libraries according to the nature of management. Cross references have been provided in the index. The arrangement is alphabetical in the index and it refers to the page number and serial number of the entries. This directory also includes a list of libraries with specialized collection from whom information was not available.

Our first thanks are due to the Ministry of Scientific Research & Cultural Affairs, Government of India and especially to Prof. Humayun Kabir, the Minister-in-charge, for making available to us a very timely grant of Rs. 2,500/- for the project. Secondly, we are thankful to those institutions who have co-operated with us by sending their returns and helped us in making this directory as representative as possible. We are also grateful to M/s. R. B. Printers, Calcutta, who have done a fine job in bringing out a clean volume and to Shri Pintoo Rudra who is responsible for the design of the cover, which we hope, everybody will like. Shri Prabir Roychowdhury, Joint Secretary of IASLIC, who has done real hard work in seeing the manuscript through the press receives our special commendation. We are grateful to all who have worked sincerely towards the success of this project.

Calcutta,
1st August, 1962.
